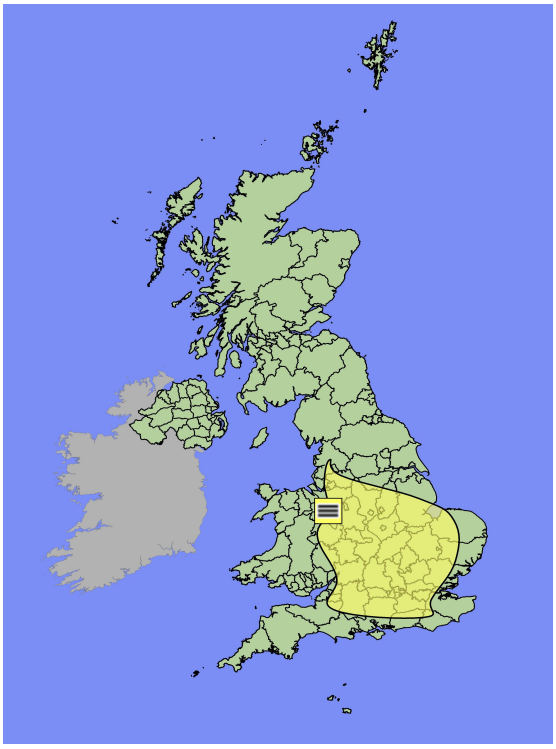
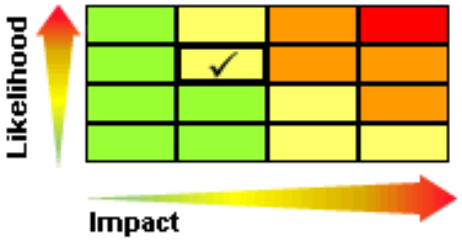
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Fog is already affecting some central and eastern parts of England. With very light winds continuing across much of the area, the fog is likely to become widespread as temperatures fall widely below freezing this evening. As always with fog there remains uncertainty about how extensive and dense it will be, but current evidence highlights central and eastern England as most at risk. The fog will slowly become confined to more eastern areas on Wednesday.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Fog

Valid from 17:00 on Tue, 11th Dec 2012 until 11:00 on Wed, 12th Dec 2012

Fog, dense and freezing in places, is likely to become widespread on Tuesday evening and overnight into Wednesday morning across much of central and eastern England and into the London area as well as parts of northwest England. The fog will only slowly thin on Wednesday morning, but a few fog patches may persist all day in parts of the east.

Visibility will reduce to below 100 m in places and therefore the public should be aware of the risk of disruption to travel.
